Introduction

RetailCo is a retail chain operating in Nigeria with four stores across Lagos, Abuja, Port Harcourt and Kano. For years the company has been running a legacy ERP system and now the company aims to modernize its data infrastructure through hiring a team of highly qualified data engineers. Our task as the data engineering team hired by RetailCo is to build a complete data platform that will strengthen all future reporting and analytics for the business, shutting down all data areas exposed through a REST API among other duties.

This report brings together the main insights from the RetailCo warehouse in a way management can read quickly.

Area	Key result	What it means	Recommended focus
Revenue	N63.06bn	Sales are strong and spread across all four stores	Keep weekly store tracking
Customers	High-value segment leads	A small group of stronger customers drives most revenue	Prioritise retention and upsell
Products	Books & Media leads in the draft	Top categories are supporting both volume and margin	Monitor discounting and category mix
Payments	Digital channels dominate by value	The payment mix supports traceability and scale	Tighten exception monitoring

Revenue performance

RetailCo generated N63,059,212,667.78 during the period reviewed. One of the most encouraging findings is that revenue was not concentrated in just one store. Port Harcourt led with N15.98bn from 19,241 orders, but Lagos, Kano, and Abuja were all close behind. That balance matters because it suggests the business is operating from a more stable base across locations. In the draft, Books & Media was the strongest category by revenue, followed by Food & Beverage and Clothing. The monthly trend also looked healthy, with July 2024 reported as the strongest visible month at N2.78bn.

Customer behaviour

The customer results show that RetailCo has repeat buyers worth protecting. The highest-frequency customer placed 30 orders, while several others placed 29. The reported average order value was N828,549.07, which points to healthy basket sizes and suggests customers are not only buying often but also spending meaningfully when they do. The biggest signal, however, is the value segmentation: 3,671 high-value customers generated N52.41bn, while the medium-value group generated N10.38bn. This means management should see customer retention as a direct revenue issue.

Product, discount, and margin view

At product level, Rustic Fresh Shoes and Fantastic Concrete Keyboard were among the top sellers by units. Discounting was moderate overall, with Sports showing the highest average discount rate at 3.60%. Margin results add more context to the sales story. Books & Media delivered the highest estimated margin in the draft, while Health & Beauty recorded the highest margin percentage at 26.15%. That tells us lower-sales categories should not be dismissed too quickly, because some of them may still be strong profit contributors.

Payment insights and data quality

RetailCo uses Cash, Bank Transfer, USSD, Mobile Money, and Card. Cash had the highest transaction count, but digital channels dominated overall value and activity. That is useful operationally because digital payments usually support better traceability and easier reconciliation. The warehouse checks were strong as well: no duplicate key issues were found, no important order fields were missing, and the relationships across the main tables held up. The main issue was in payments, where 1,495 refunds, 765 negative non-refund payments, and 719 zero-amount payments were flagged for review.

Practical takeaways for management

- Keep a close watch on high-value customers, because they account for most of the revenue in the warehouse output.
- Review the payment exceptions before using payment totals in sensitive finance or reconciliation reports.
- Use both revenue and margin when making category decisions, not revenue alone.

Conclusion

Overall, the warehouse gives RetailCo a reliable base for weekly reporting. The story from the data is straightforward: revenue is strong, store performance is balanced, high-value customers matter most, digital payments are central to the business, and the core warehouse structure is dependable.
